Agriculture and Environment Minister Nicos Kouyialis has pledged that the government will look into the alleged spraying of chemtrails in Cypriot skies, following demands by concerned citizen activist groups and farmers.

The matter of suspicious aerial spraying – believed by some to be chemtrails – was discussed on Wednesday at the House environment committee.

Speaking to the media later, Greens MP George Perdikis – who tabled the issue – said they were pleased with the minister’s commitment to investigate.

Perdikis said he hoped this time a proper probe would be done with the participation of government departments as well as experts from universities here and abroad.

Assuming chemtrails were proved, he added, they expected the government to take the necessary action to put a stop to it.

A previous investigation back in 2010 by government departments, analysing air samples, turned out to be a whitewash, the MP recalled.

There is strong reason to believe that the aerial spraying is conducted by aircraft making use of the Sovereign Bases Areas (SBAs), Perdikis added. He said the spraying tended to cease whenever there was organised public reaction.

The Greens think the spraying is likely intended to alter atmospheric/climatic conditions, also known as geo-engineering. It is thought that aircraft operating out of the SBAs are spraying particulates which affect the weather, preventing the formation of clouds, so as to facilitate visibility for bombing sorties en route to Syria.

Another theory, Perdikis said, has it that aerial spraying is linked to surveillance/espionage and the radar system located in the SBAs. The belief is that microscopic particulates scattered in the air enhance radar signals.

Yet another conjecture in the global literature is the spraying may be intended for mind-control experiments, although Perdikis said his party believes this to be far-fetched.

In a letter dated February 16, Kouyialis informed the House environment committee that he would be instructing ministry officials to get to the bottom of the phenomenon.

In the letter, Kouyialis said he had received a formal complaint from the Union Of Cypriot Farmers (EKA) expressing their concern. The farmers claim the aerial spraying is being carried out by SBA aircraft.

Kouyialis wrote: "At first glance, although there is no confirmation, it appears that these actions could alter the climate of the region, since they might potentially alter the composition of the earth's atmosphere, or chemicals released could potentially impact the atmosphere's capacity to perform a certain function, e.g. rainfall."

He said also he has asked the foreign minister to contact the SBA administration and to "investigate the whole matter."

Asked by the Mail for a comment, SBA spokesperson Connie Pierce said: "The British bases would like to make it clear that no such experiments take place by any aircraft operating out of RAF Akrotiri."

Panicos Hambas, general secretary of the farmers' union EKA, told reporters: "We are greatly concerned, having lately observed extreme weather conditions, such as today's temperatures."

Some two weeks ago, the Greens again raised the issue of 'suspicious spraying', after they said hundreds of worried residents had contacted the party's offices across the island to complain about what they believe are chemtrails.

Witnesses at the time told the Cyprus Mail that the trails were visible some two hours after high-altitude aircraft had made two passes over an area between Akrotiri and Amathus Hotel in Limassol.

The term chemtrail is derived from "chemical trail" and refers to aerial trails allegedly caused by the systematic high-altitude release of chemical substances, resulting in the appearance of supposedly uncharacteristic criss-cross sky tracks.

Chemtrail spraying does not refer to usual forms of aerial spraying such as crop dusting, cloud seeding or aerial fire-fighting. Chemtrails are also different to the condensation trail or contrails left by commercial aircraft.

Although the government might not be paying anyone, I'm sure they welcome the distraction of looking to the skies, and worrying about the problems that does not exist. instead of being frustrated by what's going on on the ground, and in peoples' lives.

Fascinating politicking of using rumors to your advantages (pledge to probe...) nicely done sir!

Plasma Dawn February 17, 2016 at 19:37

The mere fact that the Agriculture and Environment Minister Nicos Kouyialis has pledged that the government will look into the alleged spraying of chemtrails in Cypriot skies is already an insanity and an inanity without bounds in and of itself. It only shows the shallowness and the outrageously low level of common sense and scientific literacy that this minister and his advisers have. Shame on the lot of them!

My personal opinion is that the chemtrails are really lubricants for the tracks of the celestial orbs in the firmament. The music of the spheres has gone a bit dissonant and squeaky lately. Investigate this, Minister Nicos Kouyialis!

Veritas February 17, 2016 at 21:01

Very well said!

I would suggest the Minister of Agriculture and Environment, the farmers and Mr. Perdakis to use their energy instead on removing the use of antibiotics in animal production, since Cyprus is the worst offender within EU, eight times over the EU recommendation. This is extremely dangerous to our health, not the conspiracy theory called chemtrails.

Betty Robinson February 18, 2016 at 08:18

“chemtrails are really lubricants for the tracks of the celestial orbs in the firmament.” Please give me your best resource about this!

Plasma Dawn February 18, 2016 at 15:08

Sorry that you didn't get the satire, Betty. Do I really have to cite reliable sources from ancient cosmology about the celestial orbs, the firmament, or the music of the spheres? How about Aristotle or Ptolemy?

Betty Robinson February 22, 2016 at 02:40

We know you're a shill, probably a paid one. It doesn't get lower than you, congratulations!

Plasma Dawn February 22, 2016 at 03:12

So now you are blaming me for your illiteracy and/or ignorance and/or lack of sense of humor? It was supposed to be satirical, tongue in cheek, a no-brainer. It would be really difficult finding too many people in the 21st century who would take that kind of outlandish comment seriously in the first place and then, to make matters even worse, ask for references.

Where have you been for the last 400 years?

Finally, just out of curiosity, who do you think is paying me? And who are the “we” that know I am a shill?

Betty Robinson February 22, 2016 at 22:56

I have been, for the past 400 years, hearing lies and seeing them imposed as paradigms by the banksters! We know we live in an earth PLANE (it's going to catch up with you) and it isn't round, we know "gravity" is a lie, we know I.S.S. is not real! It's easy to spin these fallacies and pay creepy shills when you can print money out of thin air. All I wanted was to catch your attention, but instead of telling you who we are, how about I show you and welcome you to this hell you help sponsor?

Plasma Dawn February 22, 2016 at 23:16

I haven't the foggiest what you mean, Betty. What hell do I help sponsor and who is paying me? And who are these people who know the earth is flat, "gravity" is a lie, etc.? And why do you quote "gravity" in the first place? Not much sense in your comment above, sorry... I haven't the foggiest what ax you have to grind and with whom.

Mike-H February 17, 2016 at 19:34

Next it will be little green men. These Greens need to see a psychiatrist. or go back to school.

Plasma Dawn February 17, 2016 at 19:56

What do you mean next it will be little green men? The Greens are little green men already! Back to school would be a lot more productive and perhaps prevent the need for mental help.

Bunny February 17, 2016 at 19:17

Please allow me to repeat my post of a few days ago, and I re-post this because I am an environmental engineer:

Chemtrails

A totally ignorant sector of the community are claiming that civil and military planes are spraying chemicals to modify the earth's climate, that is to combat the climate change (that does not exist). For this, they cite the condensation trails (contrails) from aircraft flying at non-tropopausal altitudes. When fuel burns in an aircraft engine

(jet, turboprop or piston), its exhaust gases consist largely of nitrogen (from the intake air), carbon dioxide and water vapour. At given conditions of humidity and temperature, the water vapour condenses and freezes into a fine mist of ice crystals in exactly the same way as cirrus clouds are formed. These are the disputed contrails that may persist for an hour or more under given weather conditions with little or no wind. The propagators of myths pretend that these contrails are loaded with chemicals in a conspiracy by world governments to cause the effects of climate change to be mitigated. This nonsense, which they have named 'chemtrails' is not backed up by science; the pretended chemicals would end up falling to earth and no trace of them have been found by scientific researchers. There is not a single peer-reviewed paper published in serious scientific journals showing analysis proving the presence of such chemicals, although the conspiracy theorists have published that they have found umpteen different chemicals in fall-out. None of these publications have stood up to any scrutiny. There are several reasons why the so-called chemtrails cannot work. In the first place, it is claimed that they reflect solar energy back into space, causing a "global cooling" effect. This is not true, at least to any significant level. The area of the contrails is too small to be of interest. Meteorologists have known for decades that cirrus clouds can actually increase the solar irradiance measured by pyranometers at the earth's surface, because of reflections and refraction by ice crystals. Small increases of radiation levels have been observed when contrails cross the sky close to the angle of incidence of direct sunlight. There is therefore the possibility of a causal increase of temperature, rather than a cooling effect. Another reason that the so-called chemtrails are a figment of a too-active imagination is that contrails are formed at sub-tropopausal altitudes. Any effect of seeding chemicals would be ephemeral, as the air in the top of the Hadley, Ferrel and Polar convective cells is circulated down to ground level within a few days, and any reflective chemicals would become ineffective. The proposal for solar radiation management by seeding aerosols or other products is at altitudes 2-3 times higher than planes can produce contrails, in the region of 20-30 km. I have seen both photographs and videos of planes purporting to release chemtrails. These are mostly of straightforward contrail formation, without any evidence of chemical additives. However, several have shown "mysterious unnumbered aircraft" supposedly emitting clouds of chemicals from places distant from the engines. These are visibly and often badly edited using either simple photo or video editors. On some websites, both "before" and "after" editing video clips have been published. If the proponents of chemtrails have resorted to such low tricks, it has taken all residual credibility out of their arguments.

Plasma Dawn February 17, 2016 at 19:27

Bunny, please stop confusing people with facts. It will never work. And what about the fake lunar landings or the 9/11 false flag operation? The loonies out there will exhaust you before too long, there's too many of them.

Steve Evans March 5, 2016 at 20:20

I find it difficult to accept that anyone still believes that the RAF is not involved in weather modification or that a plane actually flew into the Pentagon or that office fires caused WTC 7 to collapse at freefall speed in a controlled manner! A Loony

Plasma Dawn March 5, 2016 at 21:51

I find it difficult to believe anyone believes those gigantic conspiracies the likes of which the world has never seen. Life must be very difficult, frustrating, and full of fears for such believers.

Steve Evans March 5, 2016 at 22:23

"the world has never seen"? there was a time people would have been accused of being loony for believing the world is not flat!

Plasma Dawn March 5, 2016 at 22:34

Please continue to believe whatever you desire and find credible. I have nothing to gain from wasting my time trying to change your mind and beliefs. One thing is clear: take any lunacy you or anyone else can think of and I will find you thousands of people who will buy into it.

Steve Evans March 5, 2016 at 22:56

Indeed. The lunacy of fractional reserve banking for example or maybe even Clinton not having sex with that woman or everything in the mainstream media or the bay of pigs. And how crazy were those Wright brothers.....silly loonies, Keep on believing 🤔

Plasma Dawn March 5, 2016 at 23:30

Interesting how every time you want to prove your point you come up with examples no sane person is contesting: the world being round, Clinton, Bay of Pigs, the Wright brothers, etc. Try harder than mentioning the downright obvious.

Gandolph February 17, 2016 at 20:02

And there was me thinking conspiracy theorists only bred in the boondocks; or some other place without a bus route.

What you say makes perfect sense, therefore it will be completely ignored by Perdakis and the minister (who will only 'look into it' if votes are concerned) and because it's a theory they don't want to accept, no amount of reason will dissuade those who would have otherwise.

missy y February 27, 2016 at 06:20

ha ha you are a funny bunny troll

Steve Evans March 5, 2016 at 20:15

so are you saying the RAF is not nor has ever been involved in weather modification?

Plasma Dawn February 17, 2016 at 19:06

Some weirdo suggested that the "chemtrails" of two weeks ago was an operation to disperse any potential bad weather ahead of the princesses Anne's visit. I counter-suggested that it was the result of some alien spacecraft maneuvering through the upper troposphere in search of a good invasion site after Roswell, NM, became too crowded and unsafe. Welcome to Nutsland!
